The Cinema Of Generation X

Generation X (or Gen X for short) is the demographic cohort following the baby boomers and preceding the millennials. Researchers and popular media use the early-to-mid-1960s as starting birth years and the late 1970s to early 1980s as ending birth years, with the generation being generally defined as people born from 1965 to 1980. By this definition and U.S. Census data, there are 65.2 million ...

Rated X. The Generation Gap was widening, the Vietnam War was beaming onto television screens nightly, and filmmakers were pushing the envelope worldwide. What was the Motion Picture Association of America, the trade grouping of Hollywood's major studios, to do so as to better inform anxious parents about which films were suitable for what ages?

In The Cinema of Generation X: A Critical Study of Films and Directors, Peter Hanson writes that the movie, which is about a portal that regular people can enter to experience the world as actor John Malkovich, is the "wittiest reflection" on the "social shift" of the 1990s, when, "notoriety and fame because interchangeable concepts." He quotes ...

Presenting the story of China's 21st-century industrialization push via these segmented labor strata paints a clear picture, though it is a bleak one. So much national energy is being focused on economic development that one wonders if this generation's poets, musicians, and philosophers will ever emerge (or be able to).
